SEE GAIN FOR REED, SCHNADER AS POLLS OPEN

Farley's Tammany Tactics Seen Doomed To Crushing Defeat

VOTERS ARE AROUSED

Predict Great Republican Victory And Say Many Straight Ballots Will Be Cast

Unless all the signs of the times are missed, Pennsylvania voters will go to the polls today and administer a stinging rebuke to "Jittery Jim" Farley's attempt to Tammanyize the Commonwealth.

This was the opinion of impartial observers as they scanned last-hour reports from the 67 counties of the State and noted an increasingly strong drift to the Republican ticket headed by Senator David A. Reed and Attorney General William A. Schnader, nominee for Governor.

Farley, who managed to keep himself in the background during the greater part of the campaign, rose to the dignity of a major issue in its dying days.

While the Democratic generalissimo has indignantly denied he is a party to a scheme calling for the knifing of George H. Earle, 3d, the party's nominee for Governor, in an effort to defeat the election of Joseph F. Guffey to the Senate, nevertheless reports persisted that the dirks have been whetted and the political brigands wait only the word to swing into action.

Farley has come to be recognized as the actual directing force in the Democratic attempt to capture the State and the average voter regards his inclusion as a drive to make Pennsylvania a tail to the Tammany kite.

David L. Lawrence, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, has been pushed to the sidelines by Farley, who, a few days ago, took it upon himself to dispatch one of his famous green ink appeals to the Democratic workers of the State.

Reputation of Farley was forecast last night by M. Harvey Taylor, chairman of the Republican State Committee, and nominee for Secretary of Internal Affairs.

"We are on the eve of a great victory in Pennsylvania," said Taylor. From every section of the State come reports that can only mean big majorities for the State ticket.

"Democratic claims to the contrary are as silly as George Earle's latest statement on milk, in which he promises to get 2 cents a quart more for the farmers and at the same time reduce the cost to consumers. That is foolish and both farmers and consumers know it, for even if Earle were Governor, which he won't be, the farmers would have to look to a Republican House and a Republican Senate for beneficial legislation.

"There will be more straight Republican tickets voted in this election than ever. Republican leaders everywhere are instructing their followers to get to the polls every possible vote or every candidate on the ballot.

"They are paying no attention to desperate last-minute efforts of Farley to scrap Earle and his fellows on

"Judge Priest" Offers Rogers in Finest Role

Will Rogers, "whose soul is America," as someone has pointed out, "discovers" still another quarter of our land in the new Fox film, "Judge Priest," which opened at the Grand Theatre last night, and in so doing gives to the screen one of his greatest performances.

A sleepy Kentucky town of the early nineties supplies the background for the newest Rogers vehicle, fashioned from the famous Irvin S. Cobb stories of the small-town judge and his Civil War cronies. The film gives Rogers probably the finest opportunity of his screen career.

Richer in flavor even than the shrewd Yankee horse trader of "David Harum," the Iowa farmer of "State Fair" or the wise and patient westerner of "They Had to See Paris," the drawing but quick-witted southern jurist is a memorable addition to the Rogers gallery of "Representative Americans."

The star's portrayal of Judge Priest has the mark of authenticity upon it. It is a notable folk portrait, just as his other characterizations have been: the unique blending of a splendid talent with a rich and splendid role. But more than that, it stands alone for its sheer dramatic power.

ASSUMES LEADERSHIP

Berlin, Germany, Nov. 6.—Ambassador W. E. Dodd today assumed leadership in the fight to win a speedy hearing for Isabelle Lillian Steele, 23-year-old Hollywood art student, who has been in jail here since early August on charges of uncertain nature. The American diplomat, it was learned, is taking prompt steps to reinforce the efforts of Assistant Counsel General Raymond Geist to bring the matter to a head. Their immediate aim is to persuade the German authorities to submit a complete report on the charges that are likely to be brought against the girl. In view of the vague nature of the charges the American authorities want to learn whether she is to be accused of espionage and whether she is likely to be brought before the Secret Peoples Court which has the power of dealing out the death sentence.

BASKETBALL LEAGUE AGREES TO DISBAND

Fail To Reach Agreement With Playing Floor Committee

SEVERAL AT MEETING

The Bristol Basketball League has disbanded for the 1934 season. This was definitely decided at a meeting of the circuit held last night in the Odd Fellows' home with President Thomas Juno presiding.

Failure to come to an agreement with the members of last year's playing floor committee is the reason given for the disbandment besides the fact that the managers are claiming that they will not have enough time to put an up-to-date team on the floor.

Managers and directors present at last night's meeting were: St. Ann's, Eugene Spadaccino and Samuel Moffo; Y. M. A., John Hendricks; Odd Fellows, William Bolton; Knights of Columbus, Frank Craven and William Gallagher; Hibernians, John Connors; Third Ward, Nevin McGinley and Frank Phillips; Hall-Aluminum Company, Edward Tynan; Edgely Braves, Fred Hibbs.

INLAID TABLE FORMED OF 4526 BITS OF WOOD

George B. Vasey, Wood St., Painstakingly Fashions A Valuable Piece

FIVE KINDS OF WOOD HEAR OF CHRIST HOME

Patience and skill, together with 4,526 pieces of wood, have resulted in the building of a beautiful library table now in use at the home of George B. Vasey, 232 Wood street.

The craftsman, Mr. Vasey, who is a great-grandfather, did the work during his spare time within the past year.

And the variety of woods, five in all, have been used in such a manner that the inlaid piece is a work of art. Poplar, cherry, walnut, spruce and pine, all found their way into the piece of furniture, making for a fascinating whole. The table top is in a leaf design, and the shelf in bunjo design.

And the amazing thing about the work is that no machine was used in execution of the table, all work being done by Mr. Vasey with his carpenter tools.

"I cut the legs from a walnut log," he informed, "cutting them by hand, and using merely my eye for uniformity. I had no pattern to guide me. I sawed all the strips by hand, too," he added, "and built the table just as I went along."

The top and shelf are each in two layers, the inlaid portions being three-eighths of an inch thick.

The legs and band have been carved into attractive designs.

In the shelf and table-top are thousands of small pieces of wood, these including small pine pegs through the center of which have been driven tiny walnut pegs, the latter being as thick as a match stick.

"I used a lot of 'waste' wood, small pieces that couldn't be used for much else. There are parts of a piano, an organ, and even a desk in that table," went on Mr. Vasey as he described his work. "I even used small pieces of strawberry boxes to separate the walnut, and bring out designs. I used a saw to make slits in the walnut pieces then inserted slivers of the strawberry boxes, and glued them in."

"How about the veining in the leaves?" Mr. Vasey was asked. "Oh, I ran those in with a coping saw," he informed.

The table has not been varnished. The only finishing touch given was the application of a surface wax.

This is the second such table Mr. Vasey has completed.

NEWTOWN GUILD HAS A TOTAL OF 1361 ARTICLES

Two Women Address Needlework Guild At The Annual Meeting

NEWTOWN, Nov. 6.—A total of 1361 garments were gathered by the Newtown Branch of the Needlework Guild of America this year.

These garments were displayed on the occasion of the annual meeting in the headquarters of the New Century Club, with Mrs. Horace Effrig, presiding.

Forty people gathered to hear a talk by Mrs. Lulu Wilson Aron, a teacher in Christ Home, Westminster Township, who told of the excellent work being done at that institution. This organization, the members of the local branch of the guild were informed, has been in existence for 31 years. The home was started by the late Dr. Ottenger, a physician and druggist in Philadelphia.

The institution was at first located in Philadelphia, but it was decided some years later to locate it in the country. Mrs. Aron informed her audience that the institution is not an orphanage, there being very few orphans there. At present, there are 155 children, 54 old people, four missionaries, 51 workers and 40 helpers at the home. In addition to these, there are five school teachers, a music teacher and a manual training teacher.

Mrs. Aron explained to the members of the Guild that the workers do not receive any salary, they having offered their services to the home. Following the death of Dr. Ottenger some months ago Mr. Schwab assumed charge of the home.

The other speaker during the afternoon was Mrs. R. Byron Wilson, president of the Tacony Branch of the Needlework Guild, who said it is only through the work of this organization that such places as Christ's Home receive their aid. Mrs. Wilson announced that the national organization will celebrate its 50th anniversary next May, it having been started in Philadelphia in 1885, by a Bible class composed of six girls.

The growth of the organization, said Mrs. Wilson, has been very great, but there are still about seven states in this country that as yet have no branches.

It was announced that the local branch this year had contributed 1361 garments. This number is somewhat less than the number last year, when 1578 were contributed.

Kimbel Faust and William Lange will offer a trumpet and trombone duet. They will be accompanied by Dorothea Wenner. Other numbers in their repertoire will include "Indian Boy," "Allegiance," "The Heavens Are Telling," "The Creation," and "March Along," Zamenik.

Kimbel Faust will also play a cornet solo, "Semper Fidelis," Sousa.

Greetings will be given by Dr. Carmon Ross, and Dr. Levitsky will deliver an address on "How Effective Can Teacher Guidance Be?"

Members of the P. O. of A., the P. O. S. of A., and the Minute Men are invited to attend in a body.

Honorable O. E. Boyle Will Speak at Tullytown

TULLYTOWN, Nov. 6.—A patriotic service is to be held in Tullytown M. E. Church, next Sunday evening.

The speaker will be the Hon. Orrin E. Boyle, of Allentown. Mr. Boyle is a prominent lawyer in the Lehigh Valley. He was district attorney for Lehigh county, and is prominent in the Patriotic Order, Sons of America. He is a past state president of the order, and a past national president. Few men are singled out for this honor—only the best. He is now director of the "Minute Men," a side order of the P. O. S. of A., being the leader in organizing that body.

Mr. Boyle is a forceful speaker, and will speak on "Peace," in line with Armistice Day.

Cicero Proves Able Backer For Professor In Show

Professor Buckingham and Cicero, his assistant, as portrayed by Edward Landreth and George Hoffman, are two of the most interesting characters in the musical comedy, "Honey-moon Inn," which the Bristol Knights of Columbus are staging on November 13 and 14.

The Professor, a near-sighted long-distance marksman and big game hunter, is the cause of much merriment with his accurate "shots" in the dark.

His assistant Cicero is the Professor's best well-wisher. His faith and loyalty in backing up the professor's most exaggerated statements is quite beyond belief.

Messrs. Landreth and Hoffman are destined to play a splendid part in this show.

Do not fail to see them.

The figures in the gubernatorial race were: Bacon, Republican, 22; Turley, Democrat, 19; Goodwin, Independent, 1. These compared with 1932 vote for Governor, of Youngman, Republican, 23; and Ely, Democrat, 8. Turley gained two votes over Ely in 1932 while Bacon lost one. There were 36 votes cast this year against 23 in 1932. The senatorial figures this year were: Walsh, Democrat, 19; Washburn, Republican, 13.

HEAVY VOTE OUT IN EARLY HOURS DESPITE RAIN

Over 800 Votes Polled Here Before Noon In 10 Districts

HEAVY AT CO. SEAT

Over 600 Voted Before 10.30 At Doylestown, According To Reports

A stormy day greeted the voters of Bristol today as they went to the polls to cast their ballots in what will go down in history as a most hectic campaign. Leaders appeared to be confident that their favorite candidates would win and especially was this true with the Republicans who predicted that there is a decided swing to the Republican candidates.

All indications point to a large vote before the polls close at seven o'clock tonight. Plenty of automobiles were available to transport the voters to the polls and many were taking advantage of them due to the inclemency of the weather. The automobiles were marked "Republican car to the polls."

Up until shortly before noon today a total of 839 had voted at the 19 polling places in Bristol. This breaks a record for early morning voting.

The votes polled in each of the Bristol districts at that hour was as follows:

First Ward, 1st P. ....	64
First Ward, 2nd P. ....	65
Second Ward ..... 128
Third Ward ..... 83
Fourth Ward, 1st P. ....	86
Fourth Ward, 2nd P. ....	66
Fifth Ward, 1st P. ....	91
Fifth Ward, 2nd P. ....	104
Sixth Ward, 1st P. ....	91
Sixth Ward, 2nd P. ....	61

In Doylestown there was an exceptionally heavy early morning vote being polled. Up until 10:30 over 600 votes had been cast and the voters were going voluntarily to the polls in throngs. It was indicated that the county seat is going to have a big Republican vote out.

The vote polled in some of the election districts during the early hours was said to be more than double the usual vote cast at that hour.

Registered more than 4,000,000 strong, Pennsylvania voters trooped to the polls today to elect a new Governor and a United States Senator after one of the most dramatic election campaigns in recent years.

They also cast ballots for a Lieutenant Governor, a Secretary of Internal Affairs, a Judge of the State Superior Court, 34 members of the State's Congressional delegation at Washington, 25 members of the State Senate and the full membership of 208 in the State House of Representatives.

The number of registered voters, 4,122,441, as well as the number of candidates, 959, set new record totals in the history of the State.

In the gubernatorial contest for a new chief executive to succeed Bery Gov. Gifford Pinchot, the choice was conceded to lie between Attorney General William A. Schnader, the Republican candidate, and George H. Earle, the Democratic nominee.

The victor will be inaugurated into office for a four-year term next January 15 with elaborate ceremonies at the State Capitol in Harrisburg. He will be the State's 30th chief executive.

The Youth Committee of Total Disarmament of Philadelphia will present a disarmament pageant entitled, "The Unknown Soldier Speaks," in the Church House of the Edgington Presbyterian Church, Armistice Night, Sunday, November 11, at 8 o'clock.

FORTY-ONE WOMEN ARE CANDIDATES

HARRISBURG, Nov. 6.—Women candidates numbering 41 were seeking public office in today's election.

The feminists were candidates for every type of office at stake. Two of them wanted state-wide offices—Governor and Secretary of Internal Affairs. Five of them sought election to Congress, four to the State Senate and 30 to the House of Representatives.

All of the women faced heavy odds of tradition against them. Pennsylvania never has given a woman a state-wide elective office, or a seat in Congress. Only one woman ever sat in the State Senate and but a handful in the House.

The women bore 7 party labels. Twenty-two were Socialists and half that many Prohibitionists. There were three Communists, two Democrats and one each from the pre-empted Independent-Labor, Equal Rights, and Liberty parties.

MULTIPLIED BY 3

It is sufficient to report without much comment the sad case of a man in the vicinity of West Lawn, Pa., who conducts jointly a factory supply business and a machine shop. When the codes were being formulated this man concluded that in view of the diversity of his business and the fact that but three men were employed in the machine shop he would sign the president's re-employment agreement and did so.

A few weeks later he was notified by the code authority of the Screw Machine Products Manufacturers that his machine shop was subject to its rules and regulations. Shortly a second notification arrived from the head of the code of the Fabricated Metal Products Manufacturing and Metal Finishing and Metal Coating Industry, this in turn being followed by a third from code authority of the Machinery and Allied Products Industry. These three, together with the agreement which he had already signed, made a total of four codes for the operation of his three-man shop.

This man has to date received printed and typewritten matter totaling 211 sheets, many of which are printed on both sides. He did not sign the three codes applying to his machine shop, and is now receiving notices to the effect that if he does not pay promptly the bills which have been rendered him to cover his share of the code expenses he will be reported to the NRA authorities as a delinquent.

Could anything be more ridiculous than this attempt to attach three very long tails to such a small dog and force him to help supply the force necessary to wag them? Who can blame him if he strikes?

ON LAND AND SEA

It was always difficult to understand why that sport of millionaires, yacht racing, provoked so much unpleasantness among the contestants as the recent affair off New England did, but even so, what of it? It got nowhere at all with our views with alarm departments.

Now it appears there was everything but not when English and American bridge teams tilted on English soil for possession of the Schwab trophy. The Americans took the trophy but they took (and gave, no doubt) a lot of ill will along with it.

If the boys can't play with their sailboats and their cards without fighting, possibly they ought to give up playing until they grow up. We don't think any wars will start over boat races—but we tremble at the outcome of international conflict over the bridge table.

For smile collectors: Dead as the jig saw puzzle craze.

"GIRL IN THE FAMILY"

BY BEATRICE BURTON

CHAPTER XXXVI

Lutie, shuffling up the stairs in her soft-soled house slippers, came upon her standing there and gave her a sideways and knowing look. "I hope you aren't mooning over Mr. Sholes, Childie," she said. "You know, if he'd really cared anything about you he'd never have left the house without you that night!" The knowledge that she had gleaned from years of reading about red-blooded two-fisted lovers was in her face. "He'd have swept everything aside, and taken you with him—or he wouldn't have gone at all!"

Susan turned and flashed a look on her that she described afterward as "just brazen" to Aunt Edna.

"And if I'd had any brains I'd have gone with him!" she cried out. Anger flared up in her for an instant and then died down almost at once. What was the use of saying anything now? It was too late. Everything was spoiled. Everything was over.

"What's the difference, though? I've lost him and there's no use talking it all over, Lutie," she said quietly. She knew clearly at last that she had given Allen up. She would never see him again unless she bumped into him on the street or went to the Cullens. He was gone.

She was almost too tired to care. Her head ached and her face felt stiff and wooden. She went back into her own room, flung herself across the bed and went to sleep.

It was midnight when she woke up. She lay for a moment listening to the familiar and depressing night sounds of the street outside her windows. The rattle of a late street car going along, almost empty at this time of night. The sound of somebody's radio spilling faint dance music into the neighborhood, the banging of the front gate in the wind.

All evening she had been filled with anger toward Mary Cullen, with a feeling that Mary had done an unfair thing in taking Allen away from her, and her heart had hardened itself toward Mary. But now, as she lay thinking things over once more, she remembered that Mary never had had the faintest inkling that she was in love with Allen. So far as Mary knew, she was still engaged to Wallace Steffen and planning to marry him in the summer.

A little before seven when Herbert came around to the back porch, bringing with him the last bottle of milk that he would ever deliver to the Brodericks, Susan was waiting for him. Making very little noise the two of them went upstairs and carried Susan's trunk down through the silent house and out to the milk truck in the side yard.

At nine o'clock when Vera Whitall's men were bringing their rolls of burlap into the house and backing their van up to the front porch a messenger boy brought a telegram from Susan's father. It was addressed to Aunt Edna and it had been filed at San Diego.

"JUST RECEIVED YOUR WIRE SENT LAST WEEK STOP OKAY WITH ME TO HAVE BANK HANDLE ALL AFFAIRS STOP PLEASE PROVIDE SUSAN WITH SUFFICIENT MONEY FOR PRESENT WHICH I WILL REFUND TO YOU SHORTLY AND ADVISE HER TO STAY WITH CULLEN UNTIL MY RETURN IN MAY STOP WITH LOVE MORRIS BRODERICK."

"Provide Susan with money which he will refund to us!" remarked Aunt Edna with a loud scornful sniffling sound. "When did Morris Broderick ever pay anybody anything that he owed. I ask you! That's a fine thing for him to wire when he knows that Worthy had note after worthless note of his when he died!"

"I like," she finished, "his nerve!" "Well, even at that, I've got to be provided with something," Aunt Edna said, turning to her desperately. "I can't be left with only ten dollars to my name, which is all I have this minute!—Surely some of these things must have belonged to my father—these things that you're selling. I ought to have some money. At least a hundred dollars, I should think!"

Her Aunt opened the new felt bag that she had bought for her mourning outfit. "I can't let you have that much—but here's fifty," she said. "And it's not true that anything in this house belonged to your father. Everything in it of any value was bought by his father, and he's had more than his share of the estate, as you know just as well as I do. I'm simply giving you this money. I wish it could be more, Susan, but we're getting less than a thousand dollars from Mrs. Whitall, and I think she has a feeling that that's too much. It's just enough to take Lutie and me down south and keep us there for three or four months—until the house and the apartment are sold. Wallace says he'll have our affairs all straightened out by Spring."

She took three bills from her bag, two twenties and two tens. They were old and dirty but they smelled of the heavy perfume that she used. "This does seem dreadfully little out the Cullens will look after you, and your father will be back soon. You'd better get in touch with him—and, Susan, why don't you telephone Wallace and patch things up with him? He's the chance of your whole life!"

Susan smiled. "I'm not going to be at the Cullens' just in case you want to reach me, Aunt Edna."

"You're not going to be at the Cullens'?" her aunt repeated stupidly. "Why, what do you mean? You've said all along that you were going to stay with them. Your father wants you!"

"Well, I'm going to do something on my own hook for a change," said Susan. "I'm going to live with the Herbsts—with Anna. The Cullens had rented their room before I said anything to them—in fact, I haven't said anything to them about going home. I think it's going to be a good thing for me to get away—and do something different."

"But the Herbsts!" said Aunt Edna in a meaning voice. "Oh, Susan, how could you do such a thing? To make your home with a woman who's been a servant in the family!" She broke off suddenly as if it had just dawned upon her that there was no longer any family to be degraded by what Susan did.

Anna's house was in Clay Street, on the very outskirts of the South Side. It stood, plain and narrow and yellow, behind a bright yellow picket fence. Behind it, facing on another street, was Herbert's dairy. Across the street from the house was the little store where he sold eggs and butter and milk, and Anna divided her time between it and the house, keeping both of them in a state of shining spotlessness that was amazing to Susan.

For the South Side was a place in which it was very hard to keep anything even reasonably clean. It was a region of smoky factories and backyards, railroad tracks and stockyards that wafted the most evil smelling odors imaginable upon the air both day and night.

Susan rained down upon Clay Street constantly and lay upon the sidewalk all the little houses like black sugar pills, worked its way into every building, and covered the leaves of trees or bushes like a blight.

It was Spring now, the first of April, and Susan had been living in Clay Street for eight weeks. The windows of the room that Anna had given her looked down into the back yard where Herbert kept his trucks—the one that he drove and the one that his younger brother, Joe, who lived next door with his wife and baby, drove.

Across the narrow upstairs hall of the house was the bedroom occupied by Herbert's mother, an old German woman with snow-white hair, like spin-drift around her face, and a piece of knitting in her gnarled mottled old hands from morning until night. She kept a German Bible open on a little table near the chair where she sat and rocked most of the day and she spoke very little English. Sometimes she would come to the doorway of Susan's room and make brief cheerful statements, half English and half German—"It's nice out. So warm wie Sommer, ja?" or "You look schön today. Sehr schön."

Next door to her room was the bathroom with a clean pink rug on the floor, cheap perfumed pink soap in the wire racks and plenty of cold water that came gushing from the faucet marked "Hot" as well as from the one marked "Cold." There was no hot water in the house, and whenever anyone wanted a bath hot water had to be heated on the coal range in the kitchen and carried upstairs.

Susan had not been able to find any work during the first three weeks of her stay at Anna's, and as she was able to pay only five dollars a week toward her board until she did find something to do, she insisted upon helping with the housework and making herself as useful as possible in the creamery across the street.

After she had helped Anna with the breakfast, she would hurry down to the corner of Clay Street and Twenty-fifth Street, which was the main thoroughfare of the South Side, and buy a morning paper. She would go down the columns marked "Help Wanted—Female" and put a little pencil mark after the positions that she thought she might be able to fill. There were very few of them. She could not typewrite and she knew nothing about shorthand, so the office jobs were closed to her. She knew that it would be useless to answer advertisements that read "Experienced Milliners Wanted" or "Fine Opportunity for Woman with Small Capital to Put into Growing Business." She had no other experience nor capital.

One morning an advertisement headed "Wanted: Marker Girl for Laundry" caught her eyes and she went to answer it in a taxicab hoping to get there ahead of any other applicants. "Marker girl for laundry" sounded simple, as if almost anyone could become one. But when she reached the laundry, a one-story, whitewashed building with "Sunbeam Laundry" painted all across its front, the position had been filled. So had a place in a photographer's studio by the time she got there, and she went back to Anna's and cried tears of discouragement. She cut up the potatoes and cabbage and chuck beef for the Swedish stew that Anna had at least once a week for dinner.

Dinner was eaten at noon in the Herbst house, and at six o'clock the family sat down to supper, a meal that consisted usually of leftovers from dinner supplemented by thick crusty slices of pan-bread and fresh hot coffee cake. The Herbsts washed down every meal with coffee and the big gray, granite-ware pot stood on the back of the kitchen stove all day.

After supper Anna and old Mrs. Herbst would cross the muddy yard to Joe's house with a tray of food for Elva, his pretty, dark-eyed American wife. Sometimes Herbst and Anna would dress themselves in their best clothes, which always smelled faintly of mothballs, and walk over to the Scandinavian Club to dance or play cards. On Sunday nights they went to the German "Turn" hall on Twenty-fifth Street.

Susan and Mrs. Herbst would sit in the living room until eight or nine o'clock, talking. In her broken English the old woman would tell Susan about her girlhood in the Rhine country of Germany with its hillsides of grapes and its sunshine. "Always I am filled with 'sehnsucht' for the old country," she would say wistfully. "This America—mit its baker's 'brot' and its laundries so the women shall not have to work."

She was not at all fond of Joe's Elva who never, according to her, had baked a loaf of bread or an "apfelkuchen" for Joe and who sent all her sheets and spreads to the wet wash every week, if you could believe it!

"Nein, and I do not like the way she paints. Even in the bed she sits up and curls her hair," she would say disapprovingly. "When I was young I only wash the face and put the hair down mit lard, and it is gesund. After the Elva—" and she would throw her old hands in the air to indicate just how hopeless Joe's wife was in her opinion.

"You do not have a young man, nein?" she asked Susan one night as they sat talking in the glow of Anna's pink georgette lampshade that hung from a chain above the table in the middle of the room. "No one, Miss Susan!"

Every member of the household called Susan "Miss Susan." Anna had often forgotten the "Miss" in the Center Street days but she never forgot it now and she never let anyone else in the family forget it.

"No, I don't have a sweetheart, Mrs. Herbst," Susan answered her, running her needle in and out of the stocking she was mending. "I had one, but I lost him."

"He's dead, ja?" The old blue eyes—faded as if almost all of the color had been washed out of them by the tears of a long lifetime—plied Susan.

"Oh, no. He went away from me. I think he likes somebody else now," said Susan and thought of Mary Cullen.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS SHOULD CARRY THE SPIRIT OF GIVER

By Rhondena A. Armstrong
(Home Economics Representative)
"Do your Christmas shopping early" will soon be posted as a reminder to those who perhaps are last minute shoppers.

When Christmas gifts are mentioned some folks sigh mournfully while others are thrilled with the idea of giving to or sharing with friends and relatives.

Remember Lowell's expression: "Not what we give, but what we share."

For the gift without the giver is bare."

A friendly letter or note which shows thoughtfulness and interest in distant friends may mean more than a formal card or maybe an expensive gift with a formal greeting.

Gifts should be useful to the person receiving them. Making a list of friends and possible gifts is helpful. Each suggestion will raise certain questions. Is it useful, really beautiful, and something I would like to receive? Is it a dust catcher, white elephant, something to waste storage space or a problem to use or of which to dispose?

Those who are skillful with the needle can make very useful, practical gifts. Aprons, towels, hot dish holders and mats, dress protector bags, shoe bags, braided and hooked mats, table covers and other articles for the house can be made with little expense. Bleached feed sacks and burlap bags may be dyed and used in making these articles. Attractive table covers are made from the bags by dyeing or they may be left white or plain colored and set together with gingham or trimmed with bands of figured prints and checks, left from making a house dress or children's garments.

Many people on the farm have a great variety of products appropriate for gifts, especially to their town and city friends. Preserves, pickles, jams, jellies, and other canned goods make attractive and useful gifts. Apples, nuts, flower bulbs, meats, dressed fowl, eggs, and butter are always acceptable gifts for those who do not have them. Fruit cakes, candies, cookies, honey, and maple syrup are other useful gifts.

Wrapping the gift attractively adds much. Even a very ordinary article if attractively wrapped in gay colored paper and tied may make a very impressive gift. Pleasure and satisfaction also are enjoyed by one who does the little extra in wrapping.

Cellophane wrappings are colorful and festive looking and especially appropriate for food products. Boxes saved throughout the year may be covered with fancy papers. Even brown paper decorated with a holiday scene cut from some magazine is preferable to the label on the original

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By ANN PAGE

WITH the exception of the best eggs, butter, oranges and fresh tomatoes, marketers will find most food prices easy on their pocketbooks. Meals are reasonable, with loin and round cuts of beef and legs of lamb especially attractive.

Certain vegetables are somewhat higher, but a wide selection of low cost vegetables is still available. Among them will be found white and sweet potatoes, yellow onions, rutabaga turnips, carrots, beets and cabbage. Green and wax beans, spinach, cauliflower and broccoli are moderately priced, while green peas and lima beans are high.

Grapefruit is outstanding in quality and price. Both cooking and eating apples should be very reasonable. The following menus are made up from the latest market news available.

FURMAN A. C. LOSE
TO ALMOND BULLDOGS

The point after touchdown proved to be a deciding point in the defeat of Furman A. C. on Sunday. The game was played with the Almond Bulldogs of Port Richmond, score 7-6.

The local club started off with a bang. Roe received the kick-off on the 5 yard line and returned the ball to the Bulldogs' 29 yard line before being stopped. Several line plays were then tried but with little avail, then the Furman club lost the ball on a fumble and the Bulldogs passed their way to the Furman 15 yard line where a wide end sweep gave them their score. The try for kick was good.

The second quarter was uneventful, combining a kicking duel between the two clubs.

At the beginning of the third quarter the local club showed a revised spirit and its plays began to click. The boys moved several times, but here the opposing line held and the local contingent lost the ball on downs. In the remaining seconds of the third quarter a long pass from Roe to Brown brought the ball to the Bulldogs' one yard line. A penalty was inflicted for offenses on the first play and this brought the ball back to the six yard line. Here the quarter ended.

Two line thrusts put the ball over for the Furman touchdown, the try for extra point by a pass over the line was foiled and the score remained 7-6.

In the remaining minutes there was plenty of action between the two clubs and the Furman eleven march their way again to the Bulldogs 20 yard line only to lose the ball on downs.

The Almond club immediately kicked and Roe again receiving the ball deep in his own territory hurried the sidelines all the way up the field, brushing off tacklers at every step till he was downed on 10 yard line. The Furman hopes were high at this point but the gun ended the game on the first play.

Sulgaski and McLaughlin at the guard positions, played exceptionally well, as did McGinley at tackle. Wilson who is the bulwark of the Furman line proved to be one of the fastest men on the team, being the first man down on almost every punt.

CHELTENHAM RESERVES
EASILY DEFEAT BRISTOL

By Jack Orr

Snatching a perfectly marvelous record the Cheltenham Reserves easily trounced the Bristol Seconds yesterday on the former's gridiron, 40-0.

Before this contest the "Hares" had been undefeated, untied and unscored upon in the last two seasons.

It was "Dirk" Gugenheim, the Dutch halfback for the Cheltenham Club, who was the biggest gun in their bombardment of the Bunnies. "Guggie" scored twice and three times added the point after touchdown.

The other backs also shared the glory in the victory as Brown, McPhlan and Marr each counted once. Captain Jim Yetter, the veteran wingman, also scored on a pass from the ever-dangerous Gugenheim.

The home boys counted a total of nineteen first downs to three for the Cardinal and Gray.

Stars of Cheltenham who shone were Gugenheim, "Joe" Tumelty, and Captain Jim Yetter.

The outstanding players for the losers were Capt. "Flute" Schiffer, "Carm" Gullotto and "Tony" Orazi.

Heavy Vote Out In Early Hours Despite Rain

Prohibition; Emmet Patrick Cash, Communist; and Mrs. Bess Gyckis, Industrial Labor.

In the Senatorial contest, David A. Reed, one of Pennsylvania's representatives in the Upper Chamber at Washington since 1922, sought re-election for a third term of six years, with Joseph F. Guffey, proclaimed as "Pennsylvania's No. 1 Democrat," his opponent.

Minor party candidates in the contest were: James H. Maurer, Socialist; Edwin J. Fithian, Prohibition; Harry M. Wicks, Communist; and George W. Ohls, Industrial Labor.

The major party nominees for Lieutenant Governor, who also holds the important office of presiding officer of the Senate, were State Senator Harry B. Scott on the Republican ticket and Thomas Kennedy, International Secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, on the Democratic slate.

Harvey Taylor, the newly elected Republican State Chairman, who was undergoing his first campaign fire as party leader, was the G. O. P. candidate for Secretary of Internal Affairs, succeeded Philip H. Dewey. The Democratic nominee was Thomas A. Loebe, a Philadelphia lawyer.

Judge Frank M. Trexler, who has been on the bench for the past 32 years, sought re-election as the Republican candidate to a third full term on the Superior Court. Opposed to him was Rep. Chester H. Rhodes, of Stroudsburg, the Democratic candidate.

The minority parties, Socialist, Prohibition, Communist and Industrial Labor, had full slates of candidates for all the State-wide offices.

Overshadowed in importance only by the State-wide contests for major offices were the battles for the 34 Pennsylvania Congressional seats, each for a term of two years beginning January 3, 1935.

Of the 34 incumbents, 30 were seeking re-election with the New Deal as their chief issue as both Republicans and Democrats made a determined effort to increase their representation in the Lower House of Congress where many of the New Deal measures were slated for critical inspection at the next session.

Local issues were involved principally in the election contests for the 25 State Senatorial seats and the 208 seats in the State House of Representatives. Elections were held in even-numbered State Senatorial districts for two-year terms beginning January 1 while the full membership of the House was also elected for two-year terms beginning at the same time.

Four incumbents seeking re-election in today's balloting were winners before the balloting started by virtue of the fact that they had no opposition.

Three of the four hail from Luzerne County. All of them were Legislative candidates, one for the Senate and the others for the House.

They were Senator Andrew J. Sordani, Republican from the 20th (Luzerne) District; Reps. John Yourishin and William P. Roan, Republicans from the 1st and 5th Luzerne Districts respectively; and Rep. John Schwab, Cameron County Democrat.

A total of 119 candidates for Congress, State Senate and House held more than one nomination.

NO FORTIFIED ISLAND

By James R. Young
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1934, by I. N. S.)

Tokyo, Nov. 6.—Japan is "fortifying" her mandated islands in the Pacific with factories and the "gunpowder" stored there is nothing more formidable than sugar, an official spokesman for the Japanese navy told I. N. S. today. His half fastidious statement was prompted by renewed charges voiced at Geneva that Japan is strengthening her military and naval position by fortification of the former German island possessions in the Pacific that were given to her under mandate at the close of the World War.

Japan steadfastly maintains that she is violating no provisions of the mandate by improving and developing the islands placed under her charge.

Arguments voiced before the League of Nations Mandate Commission at Geneva that fortifications are being built, are naturally of great interest to the United States as the Japanese islands are close to the Philippines and the American Island of Guam.

MISSING GIRL BACK HOME

New York City, Nov. 6.—Fourteen year old Jane Merrell, object of a city-wide search since her disappearance in a rag-a-muffin costume on Hallowe'en night, was back at her home today after being found, according to police, on 79th street. A mysterious ban on details of her discovery was clamped down by police who declined to vouchsafe any information concerning her whereabouts during the five-day search.

the Democratic ticket in the hope of saving Guffey.

Both Reed and Schnader will be elected by tremendous majorities. And that goes for the rest of the Republican candidates too.

While interest in the election centers around the Reed-Guffey and the Schnader-Earle fights, party workers on both sides are not losing sight of the other candidates on the State-wide ballot. However those who have looked over the field are of the opinion that the prospective Reed-Schnader victory will carry with it Senator Harry B. Scott for Lieutenant Governor, Taylor for Secretary of Internal Affairs and President Judge Frank M. Trexler for another term on the Superior Court.

The Wellman Process is different from any other process or method and we believe it gives more enjoyment to pipe smokers.

... it gives the tobacco an extra flavor and aroma
... it makes the tobacco act right in a pipe—burn slower and smoke cooler
... it makes the tobacco milder
... it leaves a clean dry ash—no soggy residue or heel in the pipe bowl
